Nonresident Student Transfer Appeal Information State of Washington

In the State of Washington, a student's school and resident school district are based on where the student lives. In some circumstances, a student may ask to transfer to a school outside of the district in which the student lives. This is called a nonresident student transfer. You may also hear it called an out-of-district transfer, interdistrict transfer, choice transfer, waiver, variance, or school choice.

- Nonresident students are those who do not live within the school district boundaries of the district they are asking to attend.
- Whether the student transfer request is accepted or denied is determined by the school districts. In addition to relevant laws and rules, school districts set their own policy for accepting or rejecting nonresident student applications.
- Both the student's resident district and the nonresident district must approve a transfer prior to the student attending a nonresident district.
- Denied nonresident student transfer requests can be appealed to the Washington State Office of Administrative Hearings (OAH). Nonresident transfer means a transfer between two different school districts. Please note: In-district transfers (within the same school district) cannot be appealed to OAH.

Definitions

- Student Residence the location of a student's principal abode— such as, home, house, apartment, facility, structure, or location —where the student lives a majority of the time.
- Resident District the school district in which the student's residence is located.
- Nonresident District the school district in which the student's residence is not located but is the district in which the student is seeking enrollment.
- Inter-district between two different school districts.

How do I appeal a nonresident transfer denial?

If a nonresident student transfer request is denied by the school district, you have the right to appeal. An appeal means you are requesting a hearing that will be heard by an Administrative Law Judge.

 Contacting the school district office that denied the student transfer request is recommended. Many school districts have an internal appeal process for student transfer requests. In some instances, the issue can be resolved between the school district and the nonresident student's parent/guardian. If the school district denies the student transfer request, you can file an appeal through the Office of Administrative Hearings (OAH). Appeals are heard by an Administrative Law Judge.

What should I provide to begin the appeal?

- Notice of Appeal form
- Denial email or letter from school district
- Brief cover letter (optional)

If the judge needs other documents, they will inform you during the pre-hearing process, after the appeal is filed.

What happens after I've submitted an appeal?

The Office of Administrative Hearings (OAH) will assign a cause number and then contact you with information about the hearing process. An Administrative Law Judge (ALJ) will hear from both sides (parent and district), review the facts, and make a decision.

How long will an appeal take?

Each appeal is unique, and some can take up to several weeks to resolve. A high number of student transfer appeals are typically filed within the same short period of time, often just before school starts. During that period, given the number of appeals, a decision will likely not happen before the school year begins. An appeal does not excuse a student from attending school. While the appeal is in process, the student must comply with state truancy laws by attending school.

Who decides?

All student transfer appeal cases are heard by an Administrative Law Judge with the Office of Administrative Hearings (OAH). After hearing both sides and reviewing the facts, the judge will make a decision.

What can the judge consider in ruling on the appeal? Although many families have important personal reasons for wanting their student to attend a nonresident school district, the law does not allow the judge to consider the personal reasons. The judge can consider the following:

- 1. Did the school district follow the laws and rules about student transfers?
- 2. Did the school district follow its own written policy and procedures on student transfer admissions?
